

So she had an abortion - safe and legal, quick and clean. It was all about her body and her right? Then why is it still affecting her – and your relationship if there still is one at all – and you?

CAN IT
STILL BE
WONDERFUL LIFE?

Why does her abortion still affect you?

No matter what role you played:

- Maybe you both agreed and you supported her choice
- Maybe she made the decision and you stayed passive
- Maybe you pushed for the abortion even though she wasn't sure
- Maybe you didn't want her to abort but couldn't stop her
- Maybe you didn't even know about the pregnancy until too late
- Maybe you weren't the father, but your partner is hurting from an abortion in her past

Abortion changes relationships and people.

Common symptoms for women include anger, anxiety, depression, and self-destructive behaviors. Not great stuff for relationships. In addition to being confused by her new behavior, you may also have some frustration and anger, too.

While you may be tempted to ignore these problems, they may not go away with time. Many of us have dealt with the same things and found that there is hope.

Pregnancy brings with it powerful changes and conflict. Both men and women are hard-wired to react to becoming a parent: women to nurture and men to protect. Abortion cuts short these instincts and often leaves confusion and hurt.
